In response to the global suicide-related threats arising from the COVID-19 pandemic; the Baton Rouge Crisis Intervention Center and National Suicidology Training Center, developed a community-based training called "Coping in a Crisis." This training has been provided to front line persons who interact with the CAUW Asset Limited, Income Constrained, Employed (ALICE) population. This training provides basic information about working with people in a crisis and a deeper dive into community-based suicide prevention efforts.

Three videos are now freely available from this training. It is recommended you watch the videos in the order they are presented below.
